I do not need to have zone transfers to the other domains in the forest is there any advantages or disadvantages of doing this? Can someone please provide a setup guide / document outlining these setup. Regards, Jeroen A: Active Directory is a database. It stores all the information about your network in it. The DNS is part of a database but is a separate database. However, a DNS server is part of an Active Directory domain (it might be part of a forest too) and is part of the Active Directory infrastructure. Active Directory can store the zone information in either Windows DNS or DNS Server. If you have the windows 2008
